Photo by Robert Mickiewicz (stylized as MICKIEWICZ) on Unsplash Renting is a strange and complex type of real estate investment. On the one hand, it is a good way to secure income and diversify your portfolio. On the other hand, while the income is secure, your rental property will decline over time, and your rental income will not increase. I assume that you'll focus here on the income side of the equation. A few years ago, I started renting my house in the Palo Alto and I started wondering how much of a return I could expect from the property. Maybe I should buy a rental property in another area or maybe I should pay someone else to rent my property? I had some success with the latter, when I found the company that is now Zesto Rental Property. I decided to pay them to take care of my rental house for 6 months, so that I could see what it would be like to rent the house myself. For the first couple of months, it was the opposite of what I was expecting. Before, it was a chore and tedious. Now, it was an enjoyable experience. It was a great experience, but I didn't want it to stop. It was time to invest more time into the rental property. So I got some more folks involved in the business. The real estate investing software The above photo is the screen of our property management software platform. In this case, the house and property on the left belongs to me, the one in the middle belongs to my partner, and the rightmost house belongs to my accountant (and his wife). It is a truly amazing software, and I find 3da54e8ca3
