Q: Can't get image to align at bottom using bottom: 10% So I have several images that I want to align to the bottom of the page using CSS. The images will change depending on the menu that is chosen. The problem is that I can't get the images to align at the bottom of the page, instead they are aligned to the top left. The css line is `img { width:100%; height:auto; position:absolute; bottom:10%; margin-right:auto; margin-left:auto; }`

A: You could use a container with `position:relative;` and then change `position:absolute` to `position:fixed`. This way you can keep your absolute position for your images and use `bottom: 0px` to make it fill the whole 100% width of the container. Also it's good to know that `position:absolute` works with everything but always has to be the parent's position, so `position:relative` is the one that you usually want to use. See my example: `#container { width:`

100%; height: 500px; background: red; position: relative; } img { width:100%; height:auto; position:fixed; bottom: 0px; margin-right:auto; margin-left:auto; } You can then even remove the container if you want, and it will be on top of 0cc13bf012

A: The page you are looking at uses the header font-family: "Courier New". This font comes from MS Office Office 2007 and newer. You can fix this by either installing the font-family: "inherit; Courier New; Courier New" or by using a CSS fix such as: body { font-family: "Courier New"; } font-family: "inherit; Courier New; Courier New"; Edit: It seems that they re-use this style also for normal header tags and some of the page content so you should be able to make a CSS fix for the rest of the page.

Q: how to change the base of RGB color to HSL? I'm using texmaker on a Raspberry Pi to program my LED project. First I need to define my colors so that I can control RGB leds easily. I know they should be defined in HSL, but can't figure out how to do it. A: The Maths are: HSL = Hue, Saturation, Lightness R = Red G = Green B = Blue H = Hue The function you use to convert to HSL is: CSV[H, S, L] -> HSL[H] This will give you an array of the three HSL values for each pixel. Q: Does my code need to be cleaned up? Is there any way to clean this up, I'm a beginner in classes in java? The sunlight class is taking two parameters, and one argument is the main public static void main(String[] args) { // Set up the graphical user interface JFrame frame = new JFrame("My Draw Application"); frame.setDefaultCloseOperation(JFrame.EXIT_ON_CLOSE); frame.setSize(200, 400); Sunlight sun = new Sunlight(); sun.sunlight(); } A: The sunlight method could be declared static to make it a static method. Then it could be called as follows: sunlight(); Your main method looks a bit strange. The arguments passed to the method probably don't matter,
